"Never again settle for guessing what a term means or how it applies to serving students with disabilities. The just-updated Special Education Dictionary puts straightforward definitions of more than 1,400 terms at your fingertips, including new must-know entries from the ADA Amendments Act, the 2010 ADA Standards for Accessible Design, and

IDEA Part C regulations. Whether it's bullying, prior written notice, physical restraint, or even miniature horse, straight-to-the-point explanations ensure you know how to use even the confusing special education terms as you strive to meet students' educational needs and your district's legal requirements. What's more, many new and previous definitions are now supported by examples of how they were referenced in court decisions - to enhance your understanding and guide you in applying the terms correctly in meetings, writing reports, and communicating with parents."--Publisher's website

The main objective of this Research Topic is to determine the conditions that place students at risk of school failure, identifying student and context variables. In spite of the fact that there is currently little doubt about how one learns and how to teach, in some countries of the "developed world," there is still there is a high rate of school failure. Although the term "school failure" is a very complex construct, insofar as its causes, consequences, and development, from the field of educational psychology, the construct "student engagement" has recently gained special interest in an attempt to deal with the serious problem of school failure. School engagement builds on the anatomy of the students' involvement in school and describes their feelings, behaviors, and thoughts about their school experiences. So, engagement is an important component of students' school experience, with a close relationship to achievement and school failure. Children who self-set academic goals, attend school regularly and on time, behave well in class, complete their homework, and study at home are likely to interact adequately with the school social and physical environments and perform well in school. In contrast, children who miss school are more likely to display disruptive behaviors in class, miss homework frequently, exhibit violent behaviors on the playground, fail subjects, be retained and, if the behaviors persist, quit school. Moreover, engagement should also be considered as an important school outcome, eliciting more or less supportive reactions from educators. For example, children who display school-engaged behaviors are likely to receive motivational and instructional support from their teachers. The opposite may also be true. But what makes student engage more or less? The relevant literature indicates that personal variables (e.g., sensory, motor, neurodevelopmental, cognitive, motivational, emotional, behavior problems, learning difficulties, addictions), social and/or cultural variables (e.g., negative family conditions, child abuse, cultural deprivation, ethnic conditions, immigration), or school variables (e.g., coexistence at school, bullying, cyberbullying) may concurrently hinder engagement, preventing the student from acquiring the learnings in the same conditions as the rest of the classmates.

As part of South Carolina's Accountability Program, students attending public schools take standardized assessments to gauge student progress and school performance. The End-of-Course Examination Program (EOCEP) is a statewide assessment program for high school students after completion of "gateway" courses in essential subject areas. The gateway courses were determined by South Carolina's State Board of Education and currently include the following courses: Algebra 1, Intermediate Algebra, Biology 1, English 1, English 2, and United States History and the Constitution (<https://ed.sc.gov/tests/high/eocep/> ). Scores from the EOCEP are used in a variety of ways, such as contributing to students' overall course grade, providing information reported on school report cards, and to provide accountability evidence to meet state and federal requirements.

Race and racism are a foundational part of the global and American experience. With this idea in mind, our social studies classes should reflect this reality. Social studies educators often have difficulties teaching about race within the context of their classrooms due to a variety of institutional and personal factors. Doing Race in Social Studies: Critical Perspectives provides teachers at all levels with research in social studies and critical race theory (CRT) and specific content ideas for how to teach about race within their social studies classes. The chapters in this book serve to fill the gap between the theoretical and the practical, as well as help teachers come to a better understanding of how teaching social studies from a CRT perspective can be enacted. The chapters included in this volume are written by prominent scholars in the field of social studies and CRT. They represent an original melding of CRT concepts with considerations of enacted social studies pedagogy. This volume addresses a void in the social studies conversation about race—how to think and teach about race within the social science disciplines that comprise the social studies. Given the original nature of this work, Doing Race in Social Studies: Critical Perspectives is a much-needed addition to the conversation about race and social studies education.
